Question 4 ✓

The Neolithic Revolution is considered a turning point in global history because it led to.

- increasing migrations of people in search of food
- increasing use of animal skins for clothing
- a belief in a spiritual world
- the development of civilization

Reason

The Neolithic Revolution, a movement away from small hunting and gathering clans to more people settling in permanent communities, brought about the need for more structure. This structure is known as "civilization" and is marked by written language, specialized jobs, organized religion, and the development of social classes.
